FOUNDATIONS FOR A PERMA-NENT CAMP ARE LAID

Mines Are Equipped With First-Class Machinery-Business With Tributary District Will Always Support a Good Town and Ore Bodies Seem Inexhaustible.

Attorney Fred Fontaine, of Sumpter, was in the city yesterday, on bus-iness, and in speaking of the camp. said that while business is dull right now, the prospects for a permanent camp are bright.

It is the general feeling that the exodus of temporary and migratory mining men, which has been going or the past six months, will leave the permanent class in charge of the business, and that this permanent class of people who actually own the mines and are directly interested in the success and prosperity of the camp, will prosecute work on their properties and make it yet the best camp in the West.

The smelter has been busy every day since it started, with high grade ore, and the bona fide mining men. who reside in and own property in the vicinity of Sumpter, are not discour-The ore bodies tributary to Sumpter are the largest and most easily worked on the Pacific coast, Sumpter should not be a good camp town is substantially built, the business houses are costly and metropolitan in every respect, and the volume of business transacted with tributary camps will always support a live, progressive town.

Most of the big mines are working short handed for reasons, but hope to open up with full force in the spring. The properties are well equiped to do work, the best mining machinery on the Pacific coast has been put in place in the mines in the Sumpter district. and the foundation for a great camp has been laid.

Sumpter has experienced the most phenomenal growth of any camp in the Northwest, within the past seven years. In the fall of 1897, the editor of the East Oregonian was offered two 59 foot lots, 110 deep, lying in front of Tom McEwen's livery stable. in what is now the heart of the city, for a span of horses worth about $110. At that time it didn't look as if the entire town would be worth a team of cayuses, but within a year after, those same lots sold for $2000, without improvements. Within two years, from January 1, 1898, $300,000 was expended in substantial build-
